

SPIRIT OF '76

Published by the Descendants of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence

FANTASTIC FREDERICK, MARYLAND

The Spring Board meeting held during the first weekend in April 2005, was held out in the countryside in a beautiful old farmhouse which belonged to Charles Carroll of Carrollton. It sits in the middle of his 18,000-acre farm. It is now owned by ALCOA (the aluminum folks).

After the Board meeting, we proceeded downtown after the Board meeting and had supper in a fabulous restaurant. After supper, there was the opportunity for a special program at the hotel preformed by John Durant, a musician and story teller.

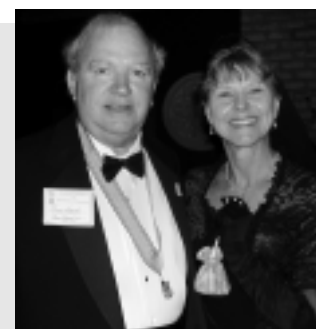

Early on Saturday we awoke to rain coming down by the buckets. After our General Meeting of the Society, we boarded a very nice large bus and motored out into the Maryland farmland to the Beatty-Cramer House, an old house dating back about 300 years which is being preserved for later restoration. As we approached the house, our bus bogged down in the mud and water! We all jumped off and high-tailed it to the safety and warmth of the old farmhouse. As we toured the home and experienced what life was truly like way back when, a huge wrecker truck came and pulled our bus out of the bog. By then we had to wade through water and a bit of mud to get back on the bus. All of this was in the pouring rain. But would you believe, not one person complained?

The bus took us downtown where we had lunch. Fred Pyne, our host, lead the group on a walking tour of the center of town. We stopped for many photo opportunities. One place we stopped was in front of Francis Scott Key's old law office. Then we boarded the bus again for a short ride over to the old Hessian Barracks, where they had punch and cookies for us. The place has been used for many years as the Maryland School for the Deaf. They also had a cooking presentation and a talk on the life of the German soldiers who were held there during the Revolutionary War.

Then back on the bus and back to the hotel where we readied ourselves for the carpool over to Dutch's Daughter restaurant where we had our dinner in a private room. We were entertained by a lovely lady who portrayed the lonely wife of Charles Carroll of Carrollton. She told a great tale of colonial life out on the farm.

President General Heyward with the lovely wife of Charles Carroll of Carrollton (our entertainer)

After reading the Roll Call of The Signers, we adjourned back to our hotel, the rain still pouring down. In short, "a good time was had by all".

Dear Friends,

Just as I predicted, we all had a wonderful meeting in Frederick. Even the pouring rain and our bus getting bogged down didn't dampen our spirits. We all extend our sincere thanks to Fred and Anne Pyne for a well-planned event!

If you haven't done so lately, please check out our DSDI Web Site at www.dsdi1776.com to see the latest changes and improvements. We have appointed Jim Alexander from Oregon to be our new Web-Master. He is open to suggestions and to any help someone might wish to volunteer. Stay tuned, because things change quickly these days.

The society is in good shape, with no major issues to report. Our Registrar-General is busy putting all our membership records in order. We are taking our records into the current century by placing everything in a computer data bank. This will allow a smooth transition to future leaders, whenever that time comes. Our investments are doing well, even in a rough market environment. This year we were able to fund four scholarships at $3,000.00 each. The Grave Marker and Recognition program is going strong. We will dedicate a memorial to those Signers who are buried at Christ Church in Philadelphia on July 3rd, as part of our meeting. Please get involved with our "Sounds of Liberty" bell ringing in your hometown. We are alive!!!

We will soon be meeting in Philadelphia for our Annual Congress. It is always very meaningful when we gather at Independence Hall as this is where our ancestors changed the course of the whole world. The freedoms we enjoy today were just an idea that had never succeeded before. The Signers were brave men who knew the danger attached to revolution. But the prize was worth the effort. And, to these men of honor, the price of doing nothing was even higher. This is your personal invitation to join with other descendants at a special place, on a very special day. I do so hope that you will attend. I know that you will enjoy it.

Very best regards,

Thomas G. Heyward

The Webmaster's Corner

Have you checked out www.dsdi1776.com lately? We are adding new features and updating the picture gallery and the Signer biographies. We are investigating ways to make the web site a more effective member communications path. The web site will not replace the Spirit of '76, but we think it can complement it. With about 1000 active members spread around the world, the web offers us an expanded way to let you know what is going on.

The most recent addition to the site is the information on the Annual Congress in Philadelphia on July 3-4-5. Check it out if you are planning on going to this meeting.

We are also building an email database for more direct communication between the Board and you. If you are interested in having your name put on the list, drop me a note at webmaster@dsdi1776.com.

If you have some good ideas about how the web site might better serve you, please send a note to the same address. I will commit that it will get to the right person for consideration. If you have material you think may be of interest to the general membership, let me know.

Jim Alexander, Webmaster

SPRING MEETING in FREDERICK

The Beatty-Cramer House

Group having fun on the street corner.

The group in front of Francis Scott Key law office.

The City of Frederick, founded in 1745, has played a major role in virtually every chapter of American history. Located at the "Crossroads of America," it was in Frederick that the "Honorable Judges" repudiated the Stamp Act, right after it's passage in 1765. It was here that many of the Hessians, captured at Saratoga, were housed by the Continental Congress. It was here that a new County was formed in 1748 to include all of what is now central and western Maryland. It was here that the roads from Alexandria and Georgetown crossed the roads from Philadelphia, Baltimore, and the new western place to be called Pittsburgh.

THE SIGNERS FROM MARYLAND

The National Parks Service has assembled a collection of short biographies at this web site:
http://www.cr.nps.gov/history/online_books/declaration/bioa.htm.

William Paca

(1740-1799)

William Paca gave to his country the example of a superior mind devoted with pure disinterestedness to the establishment of her liberties. His state embarrassed him at the outset of his career by opposing any severance of relations with the mother country, and it was not until Carroll of Carrollton had engaged with him that they were enabled to lift his restriction. In Congress Paca served on a number of important committees and was otherwise instrumental in making himself felt in the cause to which he had given his heart. He was Chief Justice and Governor of Maryland and left to his country the inheritance of an illustrious name.

Thomas Stone

The patriots of the Revolution, notwithstanding the greatness of their deeds, were in general men of impressing modesty. Several and distinguishable from their colleagues by little that is individual of peculiar. There could scarcely be any leaders were it different. Such was Thomas Stone, a lawyer, who early espoused his country's cause, but whose retiring disposition and evident desire to keep in the background have left little biographical material to posterity. Let it be recorded, however, that he left the reputation of a disinterested patriot, a useful citizen and a worthy man.

Charles Carroll

(1737-1832)

When it came time for Charles Carroll to sign the Declaration, John Hancock is said to have facetiously remarked "Carroll, this shouldn't disturb you, as there are so many Carrolls you'll not be suspected." The Maryland signer poised his pen a moment, then wrote boldly, "Charles Carroll of Carrollton", and as he finished he turned to Hancock and said, "Let there be no doubt; there is only one Carrollton." Brave old hero, who lived to see his country firmly established, the last survivor of all the signers. Another of the wealthy, Carroll knew he was sacrificing a fortune for freedom when he inscribed his name. "There go a few millions," said a little group of patriots standing nearby as Carroll signed, and Carroll heard. "What are millions!" he exclaimed. "Neither my millions nor my writing will settle this just cause, but the bayonet will." And he returned to his state to help organize the army. Carroll was not a member of Congress when the declaration was ratified. He did not take his seat until July eighteenth, but gave immediate assent. He was the first United States Senator from Maryland. At an age of past ninety he laid the cornerstone of the first Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

Samuel Chase

Samuel Chase seems to have been one of the patriotic radicals of his day. None appears more actively engaged in his country's service and few were more distinguished. Chase was a man of vigor and individuality. He was outspoken in his criticism of those who differed with him and his frankness kept him in difficulties. He early was an illustrious lawyer and statesman and was a member of his State Legislature for twenty years before entering Congress. When Maryland rebelled against approving the Lee resolution for independence, Chase served notice he would quit the commonwealth. Through his instrumentality and the assistance of Paca and Carroll, Maryland fell into line. And when the Pennsylvania Quakers of the time voiced their disapproval of war, Chase offered a resolution providing for the arrest and imprisonment of everyone taking that position. After serving as Chief Justice of Maryland, he was advanced to the Supreme Court of the United States. While a member he became involved in a controversy with John Randolph of Roanoke, who sought his impeachment. His age, his revolutionary services and his pure judicial character all pleaded in his favor and he was acquitted, to finish his course in universal respect and peace.
